

Karsten Pease

So, I have just gotten confirmation from my client (teammate) on what he would like for a website. His end goal is to have a place where he can upload his photos that he takes and where people can contact him if they want to buy one or get a hold of him in general.

My idea for this project is that it will take the same basic framework as what our resume website will look like, except I will have just one admin login, and the rest are guests on his site. The admin will be able to upload his pictures on the "gallery" section of the website.

I will be using visual studio as an editor and github to save my progress for each milestone that I make. If I need to design something myself such as a logo or other, I will use gimp.

I will provide updates every couple of weeks to make sure that the design is up to his liking, I will use bootstrap to help me on the visual aspects of the project (such as nav-bars).

I hoped I have covered everything in this update, if you have any questions let me know.

Thanks